

S/Sgt Frankie "Zoly" Molnár (b. 1943, West Virginia, d. 1967, Vietnam)
Congressional Medal of Honor

"For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty." S/Sgt. Molnar distinguished himself while serving as a squad leader in Vietnam. Under intense mortar fire, S/Sgt. Molnar left his sheltered location to insure the readiness of his squad to meet the attack. As he crawled through the position, he discovered a group of enemy soldiers closing in. His accurate rifle fire killed 5 and forced the remainder to flee. The mortar fire was followed by a human wave supported by grenades, rockets, automatic weapons, and small-arms fire. After assisting to repel the first enemy assault, S/Sgt. Molnar found that his squad's ammunition supply nearly expended. Again he crawled through intense enemy fire to secure additional ammunition. He was preparing to move a severely wounded soldier when a hand grenade was thrown into the group. S/Sgt. Molnar threw himself on it and absorbed the deadly blast. His selflessness and inspirational leadership on the battlefield were a major factor in the successful defense of the American position.

General Alexander Asbóth (b. 1811, Hungary, d. 1868, Argentina)
 Military Chief-of-Staff, US Minister

Asbóth was a General in the Hungarian Army. Following the Hungarian democratic Revolt of 1848 against Austria, he followed Kossuth to the United States in 1851. He offered his services to the Union when the Civil War broke out. John C. Fremont appointed him a Brigadier General of Volunteers and chief-of-staff. Seriously wounded three times during the war, he was appointed to the rank of general in 1864. At the Battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, he was wounded in the left arm. Despite the wound, he saddled up next morning. His arm was later shattered and a bullet lodged under his cheek in the Marianna engagement in Florida. In 1866, he was appointed U.S. Minister to Argentina and Uruguay. The wound in his cheek failed to heal, and on January 21, 1868, he died and was buried in Buenos Aires, Argentina. He finally came home on October 23, 1990 to full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery thanks to the Hungarian Freedom Fighters' Federation. His grandson attended the funeral and is in the Virginia National Guard. In his last letter to Louis Kossuth: "Deeply moved let me admit, that my ardent wish is to visit my old country to see it free from foreign oppression, to bow my head on the front of the grave of my parents, but my fate turned to a different path."

Major-General Julius H. Stáhel (b. 1825, Hungary d. 1912, NY)
 Congressional Medal of Honor

Hussar in the 1848 war of independence. Escaped with Kossuth to the United States. Worked as a Journalist. At the outbreak of the Civil War, organized the 8th New York Volunteer Infantry becoming lieutenant-colonel. At the First Battle of Bull Run, 1861, he prevented Confederate forces from advancing on Washington. President Lincoln personally expressed his appreciation. Promoted to Colonel and shortly afterwards, received his star as a brigadier-general. After Mosby's raid at Fairfax Court House, Lincoln summoned Stáhel and ordered him to take charge of the cavalry at Fairfax and raised him to the rank of major-general. Stáhel received the US Congressional Medal of Honor for his bravery at the Battle of Piedmont in Virginia. While wounded, the General led a cavalry charge which led to a Union victory. In 1866 President Andrew Johnson appointed Stáhel consul in Japan where he succeeded in opening additional ports to American trade. In 1884 he was made consul in Shanghai, China. In 1912 his remains were placed in Arlington National Cemetery.

S/Sgt. László Rábel (b. 1939, Budapest, d. 1968, Vietnam)
 Congressional Medal of Honor

László earned the Medal of Honor in Vietnam while serving in the 173rd Airborne Brigade on November 13, 1968 "for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action at the risk of his own life above and beyond the call of duty." He distinguished himself while serving as leader of Team Delta, 74th Infantry Detachment. Team Delta was in a defensive perimeter conducting reconnaissance of trail networks when enemy movement was detected. As he and a comrade prepared to clear the area, he heard an incoming grenade as it landed in the midst of the team's perimeter. With complete disregard for his own life, he threw himself on the grenade and, covering it with his body, received the complete impact of the immediate explosion. By gallantry at the cost of his life in the highest traditions of the military service, he has reflected great credit upon himself and the US Army.
